City and residents state opposition to CalTrans Highway 125 design

by Lindy Magner

Though, in his words, he was on the "hot seat" for the duration, CalTrans Project Manager Mark Leja was pleased with the turnout at the Nov. 13 scoping meeting addressing the Highway 125 extension project now in the planning stages.

Held at Mount Miguel High School, the meeting was intended to inform the residents along Ildica St. and Blossom Lane that an interchange at Ildica is in the latest plans for the highways extension slated for construction in 1995.

However, residents had a bit of "informing" of their own to do.

"Obviously, there is a concern about having an interchange there, and we heard that," said Leja less than a week after the meeting.

The latest CalTrans design for Highway 125 through Lemon Grove and Spring Valley would put a major interchange at Ildica St. and drop interchanges at Troy/Palm and at Jamacha Rd. which were included in the first alternative but scratched when tests showed interchanges too close to allow proper "weaving" of vehicles.

"That design just broke down when we applied actual weaving patterns," Leja had explained at earlier meetings, such as an August meeting of the Spring Valley Planning Group.

However, many residents along Ildica had yet to hear this news directly from a CalTrans project manager until last week.

"I had several CalTrans people in the audience busily taking notes, and for the last several days we've been revisiting past design alternatives in light of the input we gathered at the meeting," Leja explained. "One good thing is that it is still early in the process, so we have a chance to evaluate alternatives - nothing is set yet," he said, adding that the draft Environmental Impact Statement on the highway project which was expected this fall had been pushed back to next spring.

Alternatives being looked at again include a design which would place a "full-access" interchange at Jamacha Road and place "some combination" of ramps at Jamacha Blvd. as well as at Troy St., with no interchange at Ildica, said Leja.

"We want to provide as much local access as possible without creating a lot of congestion," he added.

Among those in attendance at the meeting was Lemon Grove Councilman Craig Lake, the city's representative on the Highway 125 extension project, who didn't like much of what he heard.

"We see serious problems with this project and feel it will disrupt the streets of Lemon Grove and Spring Valley. We would like to see a review of ramps at Troy and Jamacha Rd., which to us, would be a more feasible plan than trying to move houses and tear up streets," Lake commented.

According to Lake, the current CalTrans design would make Ildica a major interchange whereas in earlier concepts it was accompanied by a Palm/Troy interchange.

"There are about 300 to 500 cars a day traveling Ildica, making it a major interchange will put over 20,000 cars a day there," said Lake.

"I think CalTrans now knows some changes have to be made - of course, they hold the trump card," added Lake, who has received a number of calls from Ildica residents who are initiating a letter-writing campaign to CalTrans to express opposition.

Spring Valley Planning Group Chairman Malcolm Gettmann also intends to make his group's opposition to the Ildica interchange known.

According to Gettmann, a petition will be circulated and a meeting will be held in mid-January in conjunction with the Spring Valley Chamber of Commerce to gather input and residents' comments on an acceptable highway design.

"The meeting was very disappointing - it appears CalTrans already has its design concept and wants this one for sheer convenience of engineering," said Gettmann.

The design which he would ideally like CalTrans to adopt would place a half-diamond interchange at Troy; no interchange at Ildica; a full diamond interchange at Jamacha Rd. where, according to Gettmann, right-of-way has already been preserved; move Sweetwater Road and Paradise Valley Road planned interchange back to the Swapmeet and incorporate the Highway 54 design into an interchange at that point.

"If CalTrans took our plan, it would reduce the cost by $1 million in what they'll pay to acquire properties," said Gettmann.

Council sails through light agenda

The Lemon Grove City Council had a light agenda for the Nov. 18 meeting, and took care of it in near record time. Anticipation of a short meeting may have accounted for the sparse audience of one - and one newspaper reporter.

In the consent agenda, the council approved merit pay increases to Lesley Frazier, personnel technician; Tim Smith, firefighter; and Thomas Bell, street maintenance worker. In addition, the council set Dec. 16 as the date to hear an appeal of the Planning Commission's decision to not allow G.F.H. Builders, Inc. to locate a contractor's office in the Central Commercial Zone.

A public hearing to hear the appeal of a Planning Commission decision regarding conditions attached to a minor use permit granted to Mr. Silewa S. Georges to allow the sale of alcoholic beverages at an existing convenience market - Kwik Corner, 7977 Broadway, Lemon Grove, was continued to Dec. 2 at the request of the appellant.

Dec. 16 was the date chosen for two additional hearings. The first was necessary when a report disclosed that the boundaries adopted for Underground Utility District No. 4 needed to be adjusted to include two adjacent areas which would be in conflict with the intent of the original boundaries. To modify the the district, a hearing must be held. Another hearing was set for Dec. 16 to consider making permanent the city's "block of cars" zoning on Federal from College to Central. An interim ordinance will expire in March of 1992, and the city is considering making it a permanent revision of the General Plan and Zoning Ordinance.

A letter from Sula White regarding the licensing of home businesses was referred to the Planning Commission, while a letter from the mayor of Arcadia, California requesting that all cities write the governor and state legislators urging funding be restored to the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control was filed without action.

Resolutions were adopted formalizing the action taken to change the name of a portion of Washington Street to Columbus Place; adopting a speed survey and establishing a speed limit on Broadway from Sweetwater Road to the easternmost city limit (to correct a previous oversight); and approving a Section 125 flexible benefit plan for city employees (which would enable employees to pay for their medical and dental insurance premiums through a payroll deduction plan which would then make these payments tax exempt).

The council accepted a staff report in response to a resident's complaint of trucks being parked around town for the sole purpose of advertising. The essence of the staff findings were that there is no easy solution to the problem and that they don't believe that the practice is presently too widespread.

The council expressed great pleasure with League of Cities dinner held last week at the Lemon Grove Senior Center, and will issue a proclamation to the staff for an outstanding job.

City Manager Jack Shelver reported that more study was required on the Home Depot project, and that it would be early January before it would be brought to the redevelopment agency for action.

Councilman Burns presented information on a new MTDB program to "Adopt a Bus Stop." Patterned after the "Adopt a Highway" program which has proven successful in some areas, the bus stop program is seeking Scouts or other youth groups to "adopt" a bus stop and keep it cleaned up. And lastly, Councilman Craig Lake reported on the Highway 125 meeting he attended (see story on Page 1).

All in a day's walk, or . . . Walking with McGruff

Lemon Grove's Crime Prevention Specialist, Jack Miller, was walking down Broadway yesterday morning and was accosted by three different panhandlers on his short journey. Upon his return to the station, he reported it and two plainclothes detectives were sent to check them out.

The detectives cited the offenders and sent them packing.

The moral of this story is that the best way to take care of this problem, or people sleeping or urinating in inappropriate places is to call the Sheriff's Department.

In the Spotlight

The League of California Cities, San Diego Chapter, held their quarterly meeting here in Lemon Grove recently. Each city takes its turn in hosting a meeting whereby the others can gather to see what is going on in that city and to hear a good speaker.

Our Mayor held forth very well in bragging up our little town - because, he had a lot of which to be proud. It was held in our Senior Center on Mount Vernon Avenue, and we had a very larger reservation list, an excellent meal, and best of all, a dynamic speaker. I honestly believe that our Senior Center impressed many of the attendees from other cities, and the crowd was certainly more representative of the region than other similar meetings that I have attended. We even got some San Diego City people out as well as sizable groups representing every jurisdiction from Vista to Imperial Beach. Also, the dinner menu far surpassed the last one that we attended, and I won't say where that was.

Aside from the obvious boasting about our "best climate on earth," our Senior Center, redevelopment projects and what we are actively anticipating in the near future, the featured speaker was the best. Mr. Tom Page, president and CEO of SDG&E, is a charming and most impressive lecturer. His talk did not have a specific title that I am aware of, but I would have called it, "How the Cow Eats the Cabbage in San Diego." He calls himself an optimist/pragmatist, and he demonstrated a real deep feeling for the place we call home, but also, did not sugar-coat the problems which confront us.

The time when our "ideal weather," diverse recreational facilities, friendly attitudes and unlimited opportunities supercede all else is gone. Now, the priorities have changed to the price of homes, taxes and the actual existence of a paycheck. These basics are clouding the idyllic scene of what Southern California was some years ago, and, in his words, "it will get even worse this year and probably next year, as well." The big businesses are being wooed and won by Texas, Nevada, Oklahoma and New Mexico. They are even going overseas. He told us that China is coming on to the economic scene with wages that are a mere fraction of what they are even in Mexico. The states named above are offering free land, buildings and a worker pool that is deliriously happy to work for less than our residents will accept. He sees the middle class being squeezed out of existence. These are the $15 per hour people who buy the bulk of the big-ticket items and really keep the economy going. The minimum-wage people can't, because all of their money goes for bare necessities. The big wage earners don't care what something costs, but there are not enough of them around, so without the middle class, we are doomed. Surf and sun are great, but their value is greatly diminished to the unemployed.

SDG&E is now the lowest-priced energy producer, has fewer employees, has better management and more efficient operations than anytime in the past. Tom is a terrific manager and is doing a fine job for the San Diego energy consumer. No one asked him about the "merger" and it was probably just as well. The tone of the room as he finished his talk was one of awe and confidence of and in the speaker. I felt that if Tom Page was in favor of the merger, then it must have been a good thing, but we will never know now, will we?

Commentary

One down, more to come

by Paul Treske

Much of the United States and at least a majority of those residing in Louisiana breathed a collective sigh of relief on Sunday morning. By a convincing 61 percent to 39 percent the bid of David Duke to become the first out-and-out Nazi elected governor of one of our 50 states, was defeated.

The voter turnout was record-breaking for Louisiana, undoubtedly meaning that very large numbers of blacks went to the polls to ensure the outcome. Also, apparently enough of Louisiana's white voters decided that Duke was a bit too much, thus making the margin decisive. One wonders, however, whether it was his Klan-Nazi background that convinced them, or simply that his phony "Christian conversion" stuck in their throats.

Lest, however, we allow ourselves to feel too good and righteous about the outcome; we should not forget or deny that the populist politics of racism and fear are still omnipresent in America. And, as times worsen, and they appear to be doing just that, the appeal of populism and the scapegoating of minorities - whatever they might be - will grow. David Duke is easy to spot and easy to deny. His Klan and Nazi past proved not deniable and tended to affront even the most ardent populist.

But, there are others out there waiting in the wings. Individuals, without a taint of organized racism or fascism who nevertheless, hold views equally as repugnant as Duke's, are coming out from under the rocks because they feel that the time is right. Frightened people turn to those with easy answers; those who find simple solutions and convenient scapegoats for complex and agonizing problems.

Times of depression, unemployment and fear tend to make it easy for us to forget the First Amendment to our own Constitution and we find ourselves more and more willing to listen to someone, blatant or subtle, who tells us that some individuals or groups are at fault for it all, and if we step on their rights just a bit, our problems will be solved. Many of the despots of recent history have obtained and maintained power in just this manner.

David Duke has been put on the shelf for the moment, but one suspects we have not heard the last of him. His siren song, told in the coded words of modern-day racism, is appealing in many places other than Louisiana. Presidential races have featured such coded words and they have been powerful tools in reaching the majority white American electorate.

The success of these devices has hardly gone unnoticed, and one can expect them to be prominent in 1992. Whether we speak slyly of "welfare queens" (black), Willie Horton (black) or quotas (black), or some newly-minted phrase that becomes the watchword of '92, we will be raising the specter of David Duke and all his ilk who see the First Amendment as merely an annoying hindrance to their reach for power.

We escaped this time, but a new and more subtle David Duke is waiting down the road. One hopes that, when he appears, we will have the wit to recognize him.

The Magic of Abstinence

by Joseph Walker

I think I have a new hero among professional basketball players. You may have heard of him. His last name is Johnson.

No, I'm not talking about Magic Johnson, although he has done some impressive things lately. Magic's courageous public confrontation with the HIV virus he carries is inspirational and his desire to champion the cause of "safe sex" is being lauded by many. He has galvanized AIDS-awareness in a way that may eventually make a difference in the fight against our most contemporary "plague," and that's pretty "Magic- al."

My new hero, however, is another Johnson - Kevin Johnson of the Phoenix Suns. Like Magic, he is one of the best point guards in the NBA. And, like Magic, he is concerned about the scourge of sexually-transmitted disease. But, when interviewed on national TV a few days after Magic announced his retirement, Kevin had the courage to swim against the tide of popular sentiment in his assessment of Magic's story.

Rather than serve as an object lesson for "safe sex," K.J. said, let Magic's tragic experience motivate a return to traditional values such as sexual abstinence before marriage and fidelity ever after.

At least, I think that's what he said. I've been waiting for the quotes to appear elsewhere in the media so I could verify them. I've read dozens of statements from NBA superstars hailing Magic's potential as a spokesman for "safe sex," but I've yet to see one mention of K.J.'s cautionary reference to abstinence.

Which shouldn't surprise me. Not long ago, I wrote a column in which I said: "We teach youngsters to abstain from drugs. We make it illegal for them to smoke or drink alcoholic beverages. Why not teach them to keep sex out of their relationships until a long-term emotional commitment has been made through marriage?"

Well, you would have thought I was suggesting that we ask young people not to breathe, or something. In fact, one critical reader said that "we might just as well tell teenagers to quit drinking water because there's so much pollution out there." "But since water is so important to life," the reader continued, "we teach children from the time they are young to only drink water that is safe. The same should be true of sex. Since teenagers are going to have sex no matter what you or anyone else says, they need to be taught 'safe sex' from the time they are old enough to understand."

It's a logical argument that might persuade me if not for two simple facts. First, I happen to believe that sex outside marriage is wrong. And, second, I'm not sure that there is such a thing as "safe sex" outside of marriage. Sure, you can protect yourself physically (although it should be noted that no physical protection is fail-safe). But, how do you protect yourself from the emotional consequences of meaningless one-night stands? How do you avoid the spiritual trauma of giving yourself so completely to someone who is unwilling to make a commitment to you? How do you escape the moral dilemma of a relationship in which gratification is a higher priority than responsibility?

Please don't misunderstand. I don't believe that sex is inherently "bad" or "wrong." But, part of what makes sex so wonderful is what it represents - love, common dreams and values, commitment. When shared by people who have committed to each other and to their relationship through marriage, sex becomes a form of communication, a way of expressing deep feelings for which there aren't adequate words. It is nature's most sublime way of bonding one human soul to another. And, when it's desired result is the creation of a new life, it allows a man and a woman to join hands with God.

That's why I'm concerned with Magic Johnson's decision to devote himself to preaching "safe sex." While his intentions are certainly honorable, his efforts may further confuse a generation that is already struggling with issues relating to sex and marriage.

They need information, but they have a greater need for positive role models and help in re-establishing standards of sexual responsibility. When the lights are low and the passion is high, information doesn't mean near as much as values.

Thankfully, there are a few Kevin Johnsons out there. With their help, more people may see abstinence as a way of avoiding sexually-transmitted disease and nurturing positive social values like confidence, security, discipline and peace-of-mind - both within marriage and without. Abstinence isn't just an option, it's an answer. Especially, if you ask the right Johnson.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews

Several years ago when we lived out in Japatul Valley we would spend an occasional Sunday afternoon in picturesque Tecate, Mexico, which was just across the border from us. Tecate was a quiet, peaceful little village, nothing like the carnival-like atmosphere of Tijuana.

The road that went southeast over the hill past Barrett Lake was narrow and winding but was worth the effort to see that most beautiful San Diego County backcountry. The only requirement to crossing that uncongested border station was a smile and, "Buenos dias, Amigo." The Tecate crossing closes in early evening and reopens at just after dawn the next day.

My son was only a little tyke in those days so one purpose of our Sunday excursion was to get David and myself a haircut. I always thought that for only 50 cents it was a heck of a deal, but my beloved wife always had a hassle over how she wanted Dave's hair cut. Due to the language barrier a near "international incident" occured each time.

After the regular "barber shop battle" we would end up at one of the bake shops selecting our favorite fresh baked pastries. For just a few pesos you could get a whole bagful of the goodies, some to eat then and some to take home with us. Another much appreciated treat was big, fresh pineapple that was served up to us by a street vendor, all cleaned, cut-up, and ready to eat for the usual 50 cents.

Nearly every Sunday we could find some good, live and lively entertainment at the town plaza. There we would stake out a desirable park bench as close to the ongoing show as we could find and proceed to savor our delicious Mexican treats to a musical background.

Besides the many gay and colorful Mariachis playing beautiful, authentic Mexican music, there would always be added attractions, such as singers, jugglers, acrobats, and much, much more, to fill out the afternoon. There usually was a football (soccer) game at a field just east of town, but we chose to enjoy the musicians in the plaza.

After absorbing all the Mexican culture we could hold in one afternoon, we headed for home, remembering the early border crossing. The returning direction was always northwest so we were privileged to a beautiful sunset, kind of the frosting on the cake of our wonderful, inexpensive Mexican Sunday.

Ten-gallon donor honored

Dennis Wagner of Lemon Grove, a ten-gallon donor, was recently honored as one of the San Diego region's top blood donors. Close to 5,000 Gallon Club members and their families attended the "Gallon Club night" at the Padres near the end of the season. Channel 10's Jack White served as master of ceremonies, recognizing 49 donors in an on-field ceremony. It takes eight donations of one pint each to qualify for the Gallon Club.

Bait shop has new owner

After a short retirement, Howard Wolford is running a business which he says he took over as matter of friendship for the store's late owner as well as to put himself back to work.

"I'd retired about six months ago from Prudential (Insurance Co.) and I was completely bored," said Wolford, adding that his love for hunting and fishing also played a big part in his decision to purchase Barnacle Bill's Bait and Tackle on Broadway. Wolford had helped out in the store for the past 20 years, whenever his friend Billie Burge was in need. The store will go on, and Wolford is in the process of making some changes, inside and out.

"We just painted the outside, installed a security alarm system, and put in all-new carpet," said Wolford, who also plans some changes as far as what will be sold in the store.

"The store primarily sold live bait. In addition to that, we plan to cater to the professional and tournament fisherman and sell lures. Also, we plan to stock used rods and reels for those who might want to get started but can't afford to buy new equipment."

Wolford would also like to feature boat accessories and offer a selection of outboard motors. And, next year, he even plans to offer a line of supplies for "bird-shooters."

County may close 7 libraries

As a result of serious financial constraints, the San Diego County Library plans to recommend to the County Board of Supervisors on Nov. 26 that seven of its branches either close, consolidate with nearby libraries, or have bookmobile service substituted.

The Library will ask the Board to delay a decision for 90 days so that community meetings can be scheduled in the affected areas to share information and hear public comments. The purpose of these recommendations is to balance the library's budget and strengthen remaining services. Staff from these library branches would be reassigned to other branches. No layoffs are anticipated.

Affected branches are Cardiff, Crest, Fletcher Hills Jacumba, Lincoln Acres, Pine Valley and Portrero locations.

"These decisions will be extremely difficult for all of us," said County Librarian Catherine Lucas. "We have been forced into this position through financial circumstances and I'm afraid the outlook is not much brighter."

Library forced to go 'Back to the Basics'

Stating that the provision of tax forms has been a burden on library staff and interfered with providing library patrons with basic library services, the County Library has announced that it will no longer provide federal or state tax forms for the community.

County Librarian Catherine Lucas said, "In light of the current fiscal constraints, the County Library must return to the basics of library service."

Former Helix water polo star is now a standout at the U.S. Naval Academy

Lemon Grove native Mike Siepert learned the basics of water polo at Helix High School. Now in his senior year at the U.S. Naval Academy, he continues to excel in the sport.

Siepert had been a goalie in his four years at Helix, being named outstanding male senior athlete" in 1988. In his years playing for the Navy's water polo team, he has become a defensive specialist, often being assigned the task of stopping the opponent's big man. He was recently named to the Mid-Atlantic All-Conference team and participated in the Olympic Sports Festival held in Long Beach. Siepert is an oceanography major at the Academy and hopes to be assigned to fly F-14s upon graduation in May.

He also attended San Altos Elementary and Palm Avenue Middle School.

Who will be Miss Lemon Grove 1992?

March 7, 1992 may seem like a long time away, but, nevertheless, Miss Lemon Grove pageant director Karen Warrant and her committee are beginning the search for "a few good women." Candidates must live in Lemon Grove and meet certain age requirements (roughly, 17 to 22). Applications can be obtained from Chamber of Commerce Exec. Vice President Joyce Lazok at the trolley station.

Miss Lemon Grove 1991 Dancia Yacuzzo has done a great job, and would be happy to answer any questions applicants might have. Anyone wishing to advertise in the program, make a donation or help in other ways should contact Karen Warrant or Joyce Lazok

First Church of Christ, Scientist, to hold special Thanksgiving Day service

With roots dating back to harvest festivals in England and other nations, Thanksgiving's religious significance began with the Pilgrims holding their first formal Thanksgiving Nov. 20, 1621.

Christian Scientists continue this tradition of expressing gratitude to God for His loving care as the basis of their Thanksgiving Day service. First Church of Christ, Scientist, La Mesa, will hold its special service at 10 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day and invites the community to attend. There will be no collection at the Thanksgiving Day service, and child care will be provided.

The special service will include readings from the King James Version of the Bible and from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the founder of the Christian Science religion. There will also be a time for the spontaneous sharing of the spiritual healing that has come to individual Christian Scientists.

One selection to be read at the service will be from the book of John in the New Testament illustrating Jesus' healing of disease: "And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years ... Jesus saith unto him, rise, take up thy bed, and walk. And immediately the man was made whole."

Also, a selection from "Science and Health" explains that "The physical healing of Christian Science results from the "operation of divine Principle . . .Now, as then, these mighty works are not supernatural, but supremely natural."

While objective study of such religious healing is rare, the Christian Science church continues to document healings of disease when prayer has been the chosen method of treatment. Recently, the church has reviewed over 10,000 healings published during the last 20 years in the church's periodicals. A significant percentage involved serious, medically-diagnosed conditions. The proclaimed purpose of this religion is to return to Christian practice the "importance of healing in daily living as evidence of God's love for man."

The church is located at 8262 Allison Ave. (the corner of Palm and Allison) in La Mesa.

1991 Thanksgiving Day Message

Thanksgiving is a time when all of us reflect on our blessings and our hopes for the future. This year our prayers have special meaning. All around the world, people have faced historic challenges. As the year began, more than thirty nations came together, under American leadership, to defeat aggression in the Persian Gulf. Half a year later, millions of Russians, Lithuanians and others defied tyranny in the very heart of communism's old empire.

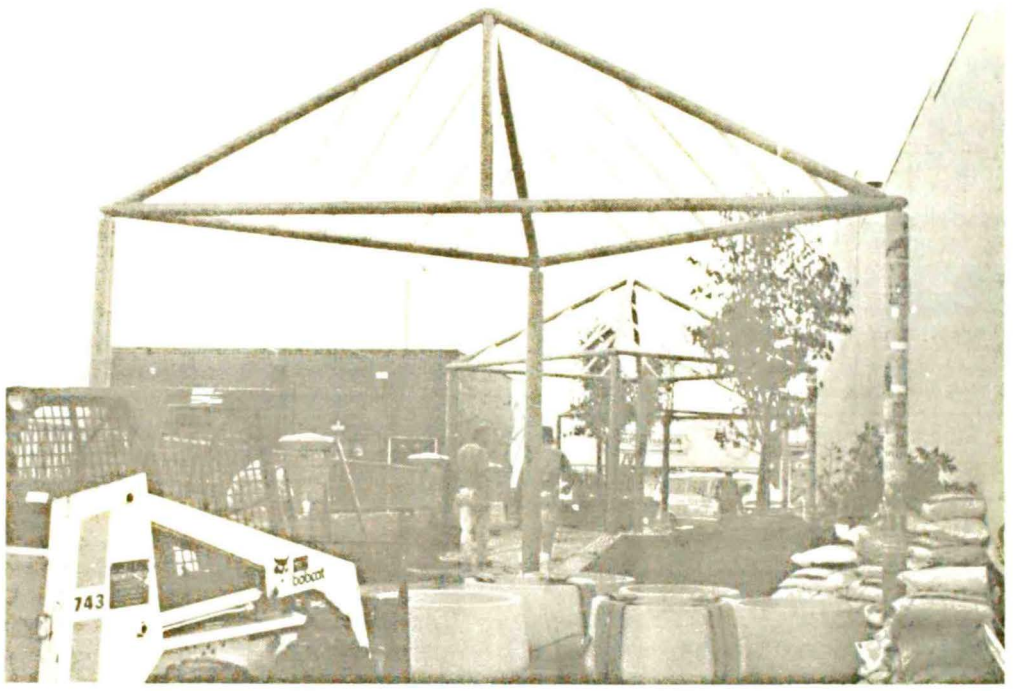
Never have the blessings of liberty seemed richer. Never have our hopes for a better world seemed more real. For this, America owes a special debt to the men and women of our Armed Forces and our Veterans.

U.S. troops have fought for liberty ever since our small republic declared its people free. This year, once again, our Forces were asked to serve freedom - to go in harm's way against a dangerous aggressor. Troops in the Gulf carried out their mission with professionalism and courage. Once again we proved to the world that the United States of America still has the "Finest Armed Forces in the World."

As President Bush stated: "Our efforts, along with those of the Veterans who went before us, have enabled the light of freedom to burn brightly."

I wish all of our Comrades and the good people of Lemon Grove a Happy Thanksgiving.

Marty Cress
Junior Vice Commander, VFW Post 2082



Workmen were putting the finishing touches on the walkway from the city parking lot on Lester Avenue to Broadway, last week. Tuesday, Dec. 3, at 11 a.m. will be the official ribbon-cutting ceremony.
